ON THE FUTURE OF AMERICAN HIGHER EDUCATION:

A BIBLIOGRAPHY OF CLARK KERR

Clark Kerr's long and distinguished career has included the presidency of the University of California, chairman of the Carnegie Commission on Higher Education, and most recently chairman of the Carnegie Commission on Policy Studies in Higher Education. He is a leading labor economist and industrial arbitrator who for many years was director of the prestigous Institute of Industrial Relations at the University of California, Berkeley. Dr. Kerr has served as a public member of the Wage Stabilization Board, a director of the Center for Advanced Study in the Behavioral Sciences, and as a trustee of the Rockerfeller Foundation. Dr. Kerr has published widely in both industrial relations and higher education. His 1963 book entitled The Uses of the University is still inprint and is one of the most frequently cited works on the nature and purpose of higher education in America. In 1975, he was selected as the "most influential individual in American higher education" (see Change, February 1975, p.25). Dr. Kerr's prominence as a national leader in higher education should make this bibliography of special significance for anyone seeking a clear focus on the major issues in higher education during the 1960s and 1970s.

I have included only those publications of Dr. Kerr's relative to higher education, excluding book reviews, prefaces, and interviews. His bibliography on industrial economics would have easily doubled the size of this work.
